Hongrong, April 24th, 1878. In the Imperial Decree published in the Peking Gazette on the reconquest of Kashgar. the massacres so warmly denounced by General Kausmann are frankly admitted. Speaking of the operations before the city tain Gill has kept a most exhaustive diary durof Kashgar, the decree says:-" The rebels under the soi-disant Generalissimo WANG district, for the benefit of the War Office, under YUAN-LIN were first exterminated and a force of from three to four thousand cavalry and infantry who came to their rescue were as the Margary route, and met with no opposivigorously engaged by YAH HU-NGEN." Further on it is stated that "the enemy were completely disorganised, and one of their not native, intolerance. His ingress into Thibet leaders, Kan Siao-hu, was captured alive, while others were beheaded on the field of battle, and the whole force exterminated." A few lines lower down we read of another rebel general being captured, his second in command beheaded, and their "whole force exterminated." This is not all. It is stated. in another part of the decree that two other rebel leaders were put to death the Governor, Miss Kennedy, and suite, took and "eleven hundred of the rebels at Kashgar were executed." And so on throughout; pig-tails looks dingy. Hest: Lindenberg has nothing but slaughter, and this not of a fee again taken possession, and is sitting in the in open fight, but the massacre of beaten troops and unresisting people. It is to be disconsolate; the gentleman lovers of guberfeared that neither age nor sex would be spared in this ruthless butchery. Extermination was not only the practice of the the presence of the commoner folk. To speak Chinese army, but it also seems to have been understood that it was to be carried out. At least we cannot resist the conclusion that the massacres met the full approbation of the Imperial Government, younger gentlemen of the "upper ten" that her since after recording that Tso Tsung-Tang, winsome smiles are to be seen no more amongst "intent at once upon the work of extermina- out hope that in a few weeks they will regain tion and pacification, first devised and carried | their equilibrium sufficiently to enable them to out measures for the subjugation of Sungaria," and then narrating how by degrees he conquered Kashgaria, the Emperor extols the General's energy, bravery, and skill, and bestows upon him the "highest mark of Imperial grace" as a reward. It could not be more clearly demonstrated that the Chinese Government deliberately sanctioned the wholesale massacre of its foes. The Imperial Government seems to gloat over the destruction of the Mahomedan rebels, for the decree sets forth that the "brilliant success" of Tso Tsung-TANG "will afford solace to the spirit of the departed Emperor that reigns in Heaven, fitting in Glasgow, in January, 1875. I may and has realised the hopes of officials and people." The idea of the soul of a departed Emperor being solaced with the knowledge of the massacre of those who had resisted his authority and disowned allegiance to him is rather rich, but the fact that such an idea is mooted in an Imperial Decree goes far to prove how little removed from barbarism the rulers of Peking still are. It is much to be regretted that the Chinese victories should always be thus stained by savage slaughter. The quality of mercy seems to be entirely unknown to them. They have no remedy for rebellion but the extermination of the disaffected. Redress of wrongs is never thought of: unquestioning submission is at all times demanded, and it fares ill with those who seek to right themselves. As a matter of policy the Chinese Government would have done well to consider whether the exercise of elemency in Kashgaria would not have been advisable. Chinese rulers must not forget that their acts are now keenly regarded by other Powers, and when it is found that instead of seeking the pacification of the conquered districts of Turkestan their generals are apparently more desirous of depopulating | identified by the marks upon them. the country by wholesale murder, the Great Powers of the West will not fail to regard the Manchu Government as a sanguinary

NEW YORK, March 17th. A meeting of Cuban residents in this city, who opposed the ending of the war in Cuba and the action of the Cuban Junta in this city in resigning, held to day. President Juan Arnas, in the Chair, speeches were made by General Cespedro. Senor Aguiters Beraza, and others, urging that the struggle be renewed, and suggesting the fitting out of an expedition to Cuba for the purpose of reviving the war. A letter was read from a number of Cuban young men, offering ten per cent of their weekly wages in support of the movement

Committee of fifteen was appointed to select a Revolutionary Committee of Five to look after Cuban interests. While some revolutionary speeches were being made a loud noise like the explosion of a lamp or the falling of a heavy body ocurred, and the whole building shook. There was a general stampede of the parties, and the wildest confusion prevailed, which was allayed in a few minutes, and the meeting adjourned. FOREIGN. O'DONOVAN ROSSA AT TORONTO.

EXTRACTS. SETTING THE DIFFICULTY.

BY OUR LUNATIO LAUREATE. The Lanctic lately was filled with dismay. When he heard that the chances of peace Like an ice in the sun were fast melting away. And that England grow rowdy as Grosce. Let me see," said the Lunatic, drawing his grog, Just to strengthen his nerves for the lark, 'If I can't find a means of dispelling the fog, And of raising diplomacy's mark.

The question is simple we have to decide, Though our statesmen have tied it in knots. And made it a kind of political slide, And have buttered it well with their plots. Lat a man with an atom of nous in his nut Just proceed to the scene of the fight. And compelling both armies to enter his hut, Their attention a moment invite."

The Lunatic having proceeded so far With the theories gnowing his soul, Determined at once to appear as a star By assuming the Peacemaker's role; So he started at once in a train for the East, And arriving in less than a week. He invited the armies to join in a feast, And then mounted the table to speak.

Saidtha Lungtio "Russians, and Cossacks and Tur Also Servians and Bashi-Bazouks. I regrot in your bosoms this war spirit lurks, As I see that it does by your looks: Let me show you, while pausing awhile in the fray, How absord are the people who fight, And I hope, though you murder each other to day, You will kiss and be friends ere the night."

Then that Lunatic spoke to those bloodthirsty troop Of the "roses and raptures" of peace, "Till they broke themselves up into armistice groups, And declared that the struggle should cense; Which observing, that Lunatic enrolled with glee, And engaging the fleet, took the lot From the scene of the war straight away o'or the sea To a tight little insular spot.

And the armies of Russia and Turkey as well Now are seeing the sights of the town, And the passion in which the great Gortschakoff fell Was as nothing to Beaconsfield's frown. But to fight without armies the Czar being loth, And the Sultan not seeing the fun. They decided that peace would be best for them both And the song of the Lunatio's done.
